

Sharon O'Driscoll has recently qualified as a counselling psychologist from the University of Roehampton. Her most enjoyable work to date has been with those who are affected by severe and enduring mental health issues, working as a psychologist within a busy community mental health team.

She is currently undertaking short-term contracts in and out of the NHS in an effort to find her niche before committing to something more long-term. Alongside this, She is laying the groundwork for a burgeoning private practice.

Her academic interests tend to revolve around the issue of social justice.
